James A Herne's Great Pastoral Drama Offering of Poli Stock Next Week.

For next week, Mr. Poli announces superb scenic production of James A. Herne's great American home play, Shore Acres." This will mark the first presentation in America by a stock company of this drama, as Mrs. Herne since her husband's death refused positively to allow the play to be presented except by specially selected companies, and under her own personal direction. Mr. Poli, howpersonal direction. Mr. Poll, nowever, by payment of an unusually large royalty succeeded in securing the rights for his Bridgeport all-star company and his patrons will have an opportunity next week of seeing the most successful play ever written, and that too, at Poli's popular prices. The story, which is one of absorbing heart interest deals with the lives of Nathanlel and Martin Berry, keepers of the Berry Lighthouse on the rockbound ceast of Maine. Years before, Nathanlel, a sweet, gentle character had fallen in love but seeing his sweetheart preferred his brother Martin, quietly stepped aside and devoted his life to taking a fatherly care of his brother's children. Martin Berry, has been innoculated with a thirst for wealth. A Boston real esteste firm offering him a large sum for the old Berry farm with a view of making a popular summer resort. Nathanlel however, rebels, reminds Martin that the old mother is buried on the point and absolutely refuses to sanction the sale. All, however, to no end as Martin accepts the offer and promises the hand of Dorothy his eldest daughtes. to Josiah Blake a man old enough to be her father but who has awakened the greed for money in Martin's heart, causing him to forget all else.

Martin's heart, causing him to forget all else.

Dorothy, however, is deeply in love with Sam Warren, a young physician, against whom, her father has developed an extraordinary prejudice. The second act shows us the interior of the Berry homestead. Great preparations are in order for the celebration of the silver wedding of Martin and Ann Berry, No scene ever placed upon the silver wedding of Martin and Ann Berry, No scene ever placed upon the silver wedding of Martin and Ann Berry, No scene ever placed upon the silver wedding of Martin and Ann Berry, No scene ever placed upon the silver has proven so effective as this, with her daughter Dorothy, and her hired girl, Perley, are seen preparing for the dinner, while Nat, all dressed up in his Sunday best acts as master of ceremonies. No imitation stage repast is served either. Doverything is real. We see the roast turkey, browned to a turn, cranberry much the boiled potatioes, crisp celery, the delicious string beans, the fragrant coffee, and the inviting mince ple, and the audience certainly has every reason to envy the actors and the feast of good things they are enjoying.

the feast of good things they are enoying.

The neighbors come flocking in and verything is as merry as a marriage sell. Blake renews his attentions to berothy. She repulses him. He in evenge, accuses Sam Warren of robery. Martin sides with Blake against is own daughter, and the happy party breaks up in confusion. Dorothy omes in tears to her uncle Nat, tells im her lover is going away and he dvises her to follow the dictates of ser heart and go with Warren. Nat manages to get the lovers away on he sloop "Liddy Ann." Martin learns of this and forgetting it is his own hild he is sending to her death, dimbs the stairs to the lighthouse top and deliberately puts out the light. All non-wester springs up, the sloop is in miniment danger. Nat follows his prother to the lighthouse, discovers that he has done and forgetting all its gentleness, with the cry: "You got he mother but you shan't have the hild." springs at his brother's throat, and after a desperate encounter, dashes Martin, unconscious to the earth, under the stairs to the tower, relights the beacon, and aids the "Liddy Ann" with its precious freight to proceed in safety.

The final act shows the reconciliathe final act shows the reconcilia-ion of the brothers. Dorothy and her husband return to home and happiness, and the curtain falls on one off those pretty plotures, that stamp Mr. Hierne as one of the greatest playwrights of the age. Mr. Ince, the popular leading man will appear in Mr. Herne's original role of Nathaniel Berry, and playgoers will be eager to see this handsome young actor in this beautifully drawn character study. Miss Patty Allison will appear as Dorothy, his seventeen-year-old niece, and the other members of the company will appear in the typical characters in which this play abounds. No expense or pains has been spared to smake this production one of unusual merit. The scenery has all been copmerit. The scenery has all been cop-ied from the original models, while particular attention has been given to

London Coroner Says no Evidence of Foul Play

(Special from United Press.) London, June 12.—The authorities today formally refused to reveal the contents of the depositions taken in UP IN THE AIR ABOVE THE CLOUDS contents of the depositions taken in connection with the suicide of Mrs. Mary Agnes Ruiz, the friend of Alfred G. Vanderbilt, around whose death an effort was made to throw a complete veil of secrecy. The coroner declared that the case was so clear that there was absolutely no evidence of foul play.

One of the two reporters who obtained possession of the facts in the case today admitted that he was paid a large sum for suppressing the story. It is estimated that the "mysterious American" who attended to the work of sealing up the affair spent $25,000 in his task. This is a greater sum than any member of the Ruiz family is supposed to have possessed and is considered proof that the person or persons most interested in the affair were wealthy. were wealthy.

Mrs. Ruiz was buried in Kensal Green cemetery.

Embalming Process Turns Man into Perfect Mummy

Asheville, N. C., June 12.—A process of embalming a body so that it will be preserved in as good condition as were the mummles of the ancient Egyptians has been discovered by an undertaker of this city, who more than three years ago prepared the body of George Lascelles, known as Lord Walter Charles Beresford, for shipment to England, in the belief that he was of a famous Beresford family. The body never was burled, and is standing in the rear room of the undertaker's place of business, a grim reminder of his skill.

Lascelles, who was the son of a Lascelles, who was the son of a gamekeeper on the estates of the Duke of Devonshire, had a checkered career in this country as well as in Europe. He assumed the Beresford name and title, and had no more difficulty in passing himself off as a titled English-man in New York and Newport than he did in the small Southern oth and Lincoln's Death Mask. A touching reminiscence of the great actor Edwin Booth is told in connection with Lawrence Hutton's collection of death masks in "Talks In a Library," recorded by Isabel Moore:

Caunt's was one of the two masks in the collection which affected Booth most. The other, naturally enough, but in a very, very different way, was that of Lincoln. I shall never forget the first time he saw the Lincoln mask. He asked innocently enough whose it was, and when I told him, my heart for a moment stopping to beat, he rose from his seat, took it in his hands and looked at it for a long time without a word. What it meant to him we can imagine. The whole awful, awful business came back to him-the mad, dead brother; the martyred, murdered president. Still, without a word, he put it back in its place, and it so med to me as he did so that he kissed it with his fingers. I have seen him in that room look at it silently over his pipe many and many a time. But he never touched it or spoke of it again, even to me. What he thought of it heaven only

The expression "the curve of health," which was first used by Oliver Wendell Holmes, himself a physician, indicates in modern mathematical fashion the fluctuating changes in bodily health, of which all are at times aware and which may be expressed by varyng curves outlined on paper.

told a story of a dog named Argus which used to accompany him to the theater. The dog was of an en habit of mind and was greatly affected by sensational scenes. When Mr. Tree was playing in "Captain Swift" Argus used to take his place in the wing and follow his every word and look until the suicidal situation was reached. The moment Mr. Tree felt for his pistol Argus used to rush into the darkest corner he could find and, burying his need between his paws, listen for the thud of the actor's fall. After that the dog would crawl back to meet his master with a howl of joy at Mr. Tree's
